The work developed by CICIG was based on investigations, information and traces found in the investigations. These were started with received complaints to be able to establish lines of investigation. This helped to develop documents that included the judicial transformations generated through judicial jurisprudence developed through cases that shows how precedence advanced conversation surrounding topics like corruption.

In judicial aspects, international law was used more frequently in the oral arguments and allowed the inclusion and the natural blurring of this line in the matter of internal law and international law. This provides evidence that dispels claims of that the approach had any ideological point of view.
